
Folder Lock is a fascinating and remarkably helpful software that provides you with security beyond compare. It is also an excellent tool for people who are frequently absent from the workplace. With Folder Lock, your documents will never be compromised by hackers or even by yourself if you accidentally forget your password! For this reason, it is easy to see that Folder Lock has numerous applications. Most importantly, it can be used to protect public folders on your computer. Folder Lock not only protects documents on your PC but also secures folders on network drives or servers presently connected to it! It can create encrypted volumes within previously existing partitions of larger disks, instead of over-writing them to use the whole disk space as one large encrypted volume. Folder Lock is a tool that can be used to create encrypted volumes, encrypt folders and lock the whole disk. Its main function is to restrict access to sensitive documents or directories on a computer disk or folder.

The following list describes the pros and cons of the software:

Windows 10 gets an update in 2017 with a new feature called "Files" which organizes files in a way reminiscent of old Windows Explorer, even using tabbed browsing in much the same way as it did in previous versions of Windows 8 and 8.1 before it. This old-style Windows Explorer is called "New Folder" for this feature, and it's the only way to organize files on modern Windows 10 PCs. Old-style Windows Explorer is rarely used in a modern PC because it was replaced by a new features called "Quick Access" and "Recent files" in Windows 7 and Windows 8.1, which have been widely used instead. The only things that still use the old-style menu bar in modern systems are applications that haven't been updated to take advantage of the newer features.
